THE REAL ESTATE REPORT

BACK TO SCHOOL LIKE NEVER BEFORE

Help your family thrive amid change and uncertainty

This year's Back to School joins the list of unprecedented firsts that 2020 has served up. As most of the students return to school, they find the landscape has been altered to include safety measures to respond to the threat of COVID-19. These changes are beyond our control, but there are measures that can be taken to help your children (and you!) maintain a sense of stability. Here are some tips:

Home-time Routine

Clear structures and routine for home-time can help to make your home feel safe. Implement an arrival ritual that helps everyone to bring closure to the school/work part of the day and transition into home/free time. This can include gratitude practices, visualization or a repeated phrase. For example: have kids visualize taking their day's experiences and place them in a cupboard to close the door.

Control what you can

Keep as much consistency as possible in the areas you can influence. Have regular times, places and practices.

For example: "Five o'clock is time for homework and we do it at the table with a snack as a reward." This helps kids to feel stable and have something to expect/look forward to.

EmPOWERment

Give your child agency to choose elements of their day/routine so they can feel more control over their environment. Teach them ways to self-regulate through activities like breathing, mindfulness practice and exercise.

Come together

The whole family may need increased bonding during this time. Find ways to share experiences and come together to support each other. Make extra effort to practice and model empathy by seeing the world through your child's eyes. Give them the space to talk and ask any questions. Deliberately focus on kindness, encouraging each person to say or do something special for another family member on a daily or weekly basis.
